Getting newly arrived parents more involved in local sport

CMY has worked closely with all levels of sport in Victoria for over ten years aiming to provide better opportunities for newly arrived communities to participate in sport. In our dialogue with communities, sporting clubs and associations the role of parents and guardians has been identified as an important strategy in achieving sustainable sporting opportunities for young people. However this remains a challenge for many.

Generation Game will bring together parents, community, young people and sporting clubs to talk about their experience from different perspectives. Come and be part of this discussion and help develop improved community connections and sporting outcomes for young people.
